SECTION B (50 MARKS)

51. Read the passage below and in full sentences answer the questions that follow.

In Uganda, there are various sources of information and data. These sources include, television, radio, internet, magazines and brochures. These different sources of information and data are known as media.

The media is classified into print and electronic. Print media includes newspapers, magazines and brochures while radio, the internet and television fall under electronic media. Newspapers are published and sold in different parts of the country every day. Some of them are written in English while others are written in local languages. Newspapers are mainly sold in urban areas because very few people in rural areas can afford to buy and read them.

In newspapers, news reporters and journalists write articles about important personalities, sports, health, education, job opportunities and interesting stories. They also include cartoons which interest readers a lot because they find them amusing. They are created and drawn by cartoonists. Newspapers are indeed a great source of information and a daily update to a lot of people.
